The dog is the one absolutely selfless, faithful and grateful friend of man. The best friend of man may turn against him and become his foe, daughter or son may prove ungrateful, his nearest and dearest one whom he has favoured with so many good things may become traitors to their faith. The money that he has he may lose, may fly when he needs it most. But dog remains most faithful to him, under all circumstances to the last. A man's dog stands by him, in prosperity and poverty, in health and illness. The dog will sleep on the cold ground in winter it only it is beside its master. It will kiss the hand that has no food to offer. The dog follows its master when he is cast away and rendered friendless, homeless and guards him against any danger. When his paper master is asleep he will watch him as if he were a prince. This noble dog remains true even to death.

There are many breeds of dogs from the short sticky Bulldog to the large sized Alsatian. Blood hounds are ferocious hunters and deadly to the enemies. When trained, the dog becomes the most obedient servant of man. The Alsatian dogs are used by the police department in tracing out the criminals by merely smelling anything belonging to the offender. In circus the dog can perform wonderful aerobatic feats. The dog is the best friend of a blind man. It can lead him out of the crowded street or across a road safely. Some dogs can trace out a man buried in snow. The dog is gifted with an extraordinary sense of smell for which it is highly valued.

Its food consists of jowar or wheat bread, milk, egg, mutton, if it is lucky to have a rich master. A poor master offers a crust of bread or bits of stale eatables or refuse, it enjoys that scanty crust but will never curse him in its dumb way. The dog is sagacious. It shows its delight towards its master by wagging its tail and discontentment by peculiar howling and by biting sportively. A barking dog never bites and a biting dog never barks. The dog watches its master's house like a watchful guard or policeman. In foreign countries dogs are treated with care and love. In India, street dogs in their teeming hundreds can tell their tragic experiences.
