A child is ill, very ill. It is rushed by its parent to a nearby doctor who is a stranger as the family physician is just then out of town. He does what his medical knowledge and experience dictate, to save the life of the child. But by next morning the child is dead. The parent is in agony. He is assailed by various doubts ; did he do the right thing in taking the child to an unknown doctor. Was it the victim of wrong diagnosis and consequent in correct treatment.

Would the child have lived had it been rushed to a hospital where better attention would have been possible. Had he been guilty of an unwise action. Could the death of the child have been due to it. Let us take another instance. I had a friend who was employed in the city. He had a cousin in the village who wanted a change. My friend got him down to the city and fixed him on a job in a workshop. A week later, there was an accident. A iron girder collapsed and crashed to the shop floor. The cousin of my friend, who was working directly underneath, was instantaneously killed. You can very well imagine the feelings of my friend and those of the parents of the dead man. Would he not have lived peacefully in the village if he had not been brought to the city.

Now, under such tragic circumstance, what solace have science and technology to offer. Consolation lies purely on how and what one things. You will agree that the most intelligent and practical attitude to take would be to look at the whole thing this way. I did what I thought was best than the result is not in my hands. In fact Abraham Lincoln, when crushed by the unbearable weight of the responsible of taking a momentous decision, was reported to have done exactly the same thing. Let us go through Lincolns words I told God that had done all that I could and that now the result was in His hands ; that if this country was to be saved, kit was because He so willed it. The burden rolled off my shoulders. My intense anxiety was relieved and in its place came a great trustful need. Instead of apply such thinking to an isolated incident or only after something has happened, would you consider it impractical and escapist if one uniformly took up this attitude. I shall do everything as best as I can, to the best of my ability.
